

How to motivate an employee?

About motivate heard all the praise. But how effective will stimulate workers to work in a more unconventional manner? Contrary to appearances, this is not so difficult. Helpful action is inconsistent with drawings, more and more attention, for instance, and the interior design office.

Considerable importance is the amount of room in which people sit the various headings. One year ago, researchers from the University of Minnesota demonstrated that the height of the room affects the possibility of a cognitive and information processing. Joan Meyers-Levy, professor of marketing, explains that through a process in the head of the person to activate a concept - When people are in a room with high ceiling, launches the idea of freedom. When the roof overhang just above their head, concepts are more limited. The idea of freedom results in the processing of information, which promotes greater diversity to the incoming head of the ideas. Sense of limitations starts the processing of information focused on details. Among the architects become increasingly popular trend of "green buildings" (called green buildings). We used to meet certain standards were considered avant-garde freak worthy of praise, but now everyone is trying to build the friendship with the environment. For the company's green office is doubly good. Positively affect the image, outside that fosters productivity and reduces missed workers. Sick building syndrome (called Sick Building Syndrome) is eliminated once and for all. Not only saves energy but also gives access to sunlight and provide natural ventilation. The latter reduces the rate of abandoned working days by as much as 6 percent. The presence of appropriately plant noise, and reduces the impression of uniformity. People working in areas painted in colors more saturated colors work with greater vigor and impetus. Women tolerate them and even love, men, rather than their website. According to researchers from the University of Texas, people prefer an office white, green, blue or gray, and evaluate the worst orange and purple walls. While this may surprise, the general impression of the cold / warm colors used do not affect the mood of employees. Men would like to work in rooms of white, green, blue or gray, and not their delights with the prospect of spending many hours in the yellow, orange or purple four walls. Women prefer the green room, red and beige. Do not carry their rooms while the gray and orange. Cool colors foster concentration on complex tasks, warm may detract attention from them. All recognize the white variant of the least distract, but painted on the color correction at the offices of the language committing the most errors. You can not hide it, that's not so good a man calms down, as seen through the window nature. Even if the LCD will display the same scene, so it does not effectively lower the pulse. Peter Kahn, University of Washington maintains that as a species we need contact with nature for their own good mental and physical